The Impact of R2P on Sovereignty

Since the mid-2000s, the emerging principle of Responsibility to Protect (R2P) has been challenging the 1945 UN principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in domestic affairs, as well as the inviolability of borders. This seminar will present the reasons why this is happening, as well as offer a preliminary assessment of the application of this principle to date. As illustrations, it will take the recent and current conflicts in Libya and Syria.
